In addition to the live music festival, this year's World Music Festival @ Taiwan will feature online matching program, Online Connection for Music Industry Professionals, to better promote Taiwan's original music to a global audience and to connect with professionals worldwide.

Also a first, this year's event is being curated in cooperation with an overseas organization, Small World Music (which heads Global Toronto), in such aspects as performances, lectures, and our Online Connection platform, giving the event a more internationalized scale and vision.

18 groups will perform at the event, including two from abroad: two who will participate online, Tio Chornhi and Bantü Salsa, via cooperation with Global Toronto. Also, online will be six lectures on varying topics by speakers from all over the world: one by three Taiwanese music festival curators of different generations, one by Taiwanese musicians on creating music, two arranged in cooperation with Global Toronto on issues related to music, and two on musical instruments by speakers from abroad. With a mix of live and online aspects, fans of the event from Taiwan and abroad will enjoy a new mode of participation in making beautiful memories with us.

The Online Connection, to be attended by 15 curators from around the world, will be up and running during the three days of the event, and viewing of content will be available until November 12th. Through interaction and exchanges via the showcase events, performances, lectures, and the Online Connection, the 2021 World Music Festival @ Taiwan will show Taiwanese music to the world while bringing in music from abroad, just as we did in the years before the Covid-19 pandemic, in turn creating more opportunities for music-related exchanges and partnerships. The event is going to be a seamless integration of music with the international community.
